The mirror in your bathroom is probably one of the most important mirrors in your home. You not only use it daily to check your appearance but also, use it to create your appearance. It is almost indispensable but unfortunately, due to the high humidity in the bathroom, corrosion in traditional metal-coated mirrors is common and it usually takes the form of little black dots that begin from the corner edges of the mirror and spread their way through, like an infection. Rubine is aware of this unsightly issue and has used only the non-metallic mirror for all of its mirror-related products. This non-metallic mirror was first brought into the European mirror industry in 1998 and it was considered as the most modern, durable, and environmentally friendly mirror. Also, Blum hinges for its cabinet doors.
